

Ninepoint Focused Global Dividend Fund

January 2024 Commentary

Summary

Jeff Sayer, CFA
Vice President, Portfolio Manager

- Ninepoint Focused Global Dividend Fund had a YTD return of 2.87% up to January 31, compared to the S&P Global 1200 Index's total return of 2.26%.
- The Communication and Information Technology sectors continued their upward trend into 2024, while Real Estate and Utilities sectors lagged due to a slight increase in US 10-year Treasury bond yields.
- The Federal Reserve held interest rates steady at 5.25% to 5.50% during the January FOMC meeting, maintaining a tough stance to prevent inflation resurgence, with no significant change in policy direction indicated for the near term.
- Expectations for the initial rate cut have shifted to May or June of 2024, with the anticipation of some market volatility in the first half of the year as investors await clearer signs of monetary policy easing.
- The Fund is currently overweight the Financials, Health Care and Industrials sectors, while underweight the Information Technology, Materials and Utilities sectors.
- The Fund was concentrated in 28 positions, with the top 10 holdings accounting for approximately 42.0% of the Fund. Over the prior fiscal year, 18 out of our 28 holdings have announced a dividend increase, with an average hike of 2.7% (median hike of 7.5%).

Monthly Update

Ninepoint Focused Global Dividend Fund - Compounded Returns<sup>1</sup> As of January 31, 2024 (Series F NPP964) | Inception Date: November 25, 2015

	1M	YTD	3M	6M	1YR	3YR	5YR	Inception
Fund	2.9%	2.9%	10.6%	8.7%	16.5%	8.4%	9.5%	7.7%
S&P Global 1200 TR (CAD)	2.3%	2.3%	11.1%	6.4%	16.3%	9.9%	12.0%	10.5%

The year 2024 has started off much like 2023 ended, with stocks in the Communication and Information Technology sectors continuing to rally. However, after peaking last October and falling through the end of the year, the US 10-year Treasury bond yield retraced some of its recent move lower this past month. As rates ticked slightly higher in January, rate-sensitive securities in the Real Estate and Utilities sectors underperformed. Longer term, we are not overly concerned about this backup in rates, since we believe that those looking for immediate rate cuts simply got ahead of themselves towards the end of last year. Instead of focusing on the near term, investors should take a step back and focus on the bigger picture: inflation is easing, growth remains resilient, the jobs market remains strong, the earnings recession is over and rate cuts will begin sometime in 2024.

At the January FOMC meeting, the Fed unsurprisingly held rates steady at a range of 5.25% to 5.50%. As we've discussed previously, we've been reasonably confident that the final interest rate hike for the cycle occurred at the July meeting, but we recognized that Fed officials would continue to talk tough to prevent resurgent inflation. During Powell's press conference on January 31, the Chairman stuck to this script, saying "So if you take that to the current context, we're going to be data dependent. We're going to be looking at this meeting by meeting. Based on the meeting today, I would tell you that I don't think it's likely that the Committee will reach a level of confidence [to cut rates] by the time of the March meeting, to identify March as the time to do that. But that's to be seen". We don't see anything in that statement that changes our view that the Fed is taking a more balanced view in pursuit of their dual mandate of full employment and price stability.

Admittedly, the odds of a March cut are lower today (but not zero) and the most likely scenarios suggest an initial rate cut in May or June of 2024. After almost two years since the first interest rate hike, we accept the need to wait patiently for another two or three months before an easier monetary policy. But because the precise timing is unknown and the future economic environment remains uncertain, it would be reasonable to expect some volatility in the first half of 2024. Further, with the S&P 500 currently above 4,900 (or almost 20x 2024 forward earnings according to FactSet), it feels like investors have optimistically pulled forward some future returns. Therefore, after a flat year of earnings growth in 2023, a return to earnings growth in 2024 (currently forecasted at just under 10%, again according to FactSet) will be required for the market to continue to move significantly higher over the balance of the year.

Nevertheless, if growth does meet expectations and mega-cap tech moves sideways or even underperforms in 2024 from here (quite possible given the high expectations and high multiples already applied to these equities), our dividend focused mandates should do well on both an absolute and relative basis. As always, we are continually searching for companies that are expected to post solid revenue, earnings and dividend growth but still trade at acceptable valuations today. For the Ninepoint Focused Global Dividend Fund, we are concentrating our research efforts on high quality, dividend growth companies given our positive assessment of the risk/reward outlook over the next few years. After many years of outperformance from the high growth and high valuation Information Technology sector, if interest rates fall and earnings growth becomes more widespread, we would expect a rotation out of the big winners of 2023 and into undervalued equities more aligned with our dividend-focused mandates in 2024.

Top contributors to the year-to-date performance of the Ninepoint Focused Global Dividend Fund by sector included Financials (+66 bps), Information Technology (+53 bps) and Consumer Staples (+44 bps), while no sector detracted from performance.

On a relative basis, positive return contributions from the Consumer Discretionary (+35 bps), Consumer Staples (+30 bps) and Industrials (+20 bps) sectors were offset by negative contributions from the Information Technology (-63 bps), Communication (-23 bps) and Health Care (-6 bps) sectors.

We are currently overweight the Financials, Health Care and Industrials sectors, while underweight the Information Technology, Materials and Utilities sectors. With the debate shifting toward the timing of the first interest rate cut of the cycle, we are looking forward to better relative performance from dividend paying securities in 2024. In the meantime, we remain focused on high quality, dividend payers that have demonstrated the ability to consistently generate revenue and earnings growth through the business cycle.
